This is because hotel wifi generally has some access page that automatically opens up on computers, asking to accept their terms of Wifi and whatnot (some of them even asking for a code).

The Wii does not get this page and therefore cannot use the wifi for online play. Internet browsing might work, but when you exit the browser, the terms are removed again so you can't just access the page, close the browser, and play online.

I concur with this explanation, I have tried many times to get my various consoles online at hotels and there is almost always some sort of interstitial log-in page that can't be accessed on a console, only on a computer web browser. It sucks, but what are you gonna do, right?

Try to open the Wii's internet browser and see if the hotel's Wi-Fi page comes up. If it does, enter all information needed to begin Wi-Fi. After, it should be connected to the internet and you can use any channels or games that use Wi-Fi (Note: I do not know if this will work, but you could try 😃. I do not know how online play would work, though). You may need to redo this process if you turn your Wii off.

I helped a teacher at my school buy a wii for the special ed class to use and the school has a login page to use the internet so we can't do system updates as the connection test fails. The 3DS does not have this problem as you can skip connection test and sign in using web browser (assuming you are already on latest firmware with web browser).

You need to have Internet Channel already installed

Then connect to the Network

Open Internet Channel and go to google.com

It will redirect you to the login

Login (or accept the terms and stuff)

Close Internet Channel

Now it will work until the session expires
